What is a Giclee Print?

The term Giclee is French for “spray”. Today , artists commonly use the term to describe a fine art print produced by the inkjet printing method. A giclee print is made with a highly sophisticated inkjet printer using long lasting archival pigment inksets and stable media. Our inks have been tested and should produce a print with a longevity of 100+ years, under ideal conditions.

Capture

In order to make a print, we need to get your image into a computer. There are several ways to do this, including direct scanning, digital image capture, and scanning from a transparency. Whichever method you choose, the quality of the end product is determined at this step.

Color

In addition to good color management practices, our technicians also use a great amount of skill and judgement to get great color. It’s important to keep in mind that a giclee is a reproduction, and will not match an original 100%. This said, we think you’ll be very happy with the results and keep your expenses reasonable by exercising restraint when judging and adjusting color.

Proofs

We are happy to provide proofs of your work before making the actual prints. Proofs include an 8x10 of the entire image, as well as a small strip at full magnification. The price is $25 per proof, plus postage. Overall color adjustments may be made at a cost of a new proof. Specific color adjustments are made at a price of $75 /hr, plus a new proof.

Stretching

Canvas prints should be stretched for display. Some artists prefer to do this themselves, or have their framer stretch canvas for them. We also offer this service. We offer three types of stretches. Simple canvas stretch with white canvas and staples in back, Museum wraps with full image and black (or colored) canvas on side, Gallery wraps with image continuing around the sides of the stretcher.
